ROB'T G. HENDRICKS DIES SUDDENLY ON FISHING TRIP

Well-Known Member of Bucks County Bar is Victim of Indigestion Attack

ACTIVE, COURT AFFAIRS

Dies at Ocean City, Maryland, Where He Went On Monday

DOYLESTOWN, Aug. 13—A well known member of the Bucks County Bar and a veteran of World War I died suddenly at Ocean City, Maryland, this morning at four o'clock, according to word received here. The deceased, Robert G. Hendricks, 44, was the victim of an attack suffered at his hotel. The exact details are not known but according to the word received Hendricks died before the arrival of a physician who had been summoned early this morning.

Hendricks accompanied by Horace Cooper, of Langhorne, left Bucks County Monday to go on a fishing trip for marlins of which sport both men were very fond.

In the information received here today it was stated that Hendricks suffered an attack of what was thought to be indigestion. He was taken ill before friends arrived to accompany he and Cooper on the fishing trip. A physician was hurriedly summoned but Hendricks died before his arrival.

The deceased was the son of the late Freeman Hendricks, former district attorney of Bucks County. The deceased was active in civil and criminal court activities of Bucks County and was a referee in bankruptcy. He was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and also attended Dickinson College until 1915 when he enlisted in the U. S. Army and saw service overseas with the heavy tank corps. Upon his return from army service he returned to and completed his educa-

Informs Wife of Death Of Her Five Children

DOYLESTOWN, Aug. 13—Mrs. Ernest Love, mother of the five children who lost their lives in a fire which destroyed their home in Wrightstown Township, Saturday night, was told yesterday of the tragedy which took all but one of her six children. The mother, now a patient in the Emergency Hospital was informed of the tragedy by her husband.

Love called on his wife in Doylestown Hospital, where she is still being treated for lacerations suffered when she tried to save some of the children.

"How are they?" she asked him.

"Well, we have something left," replied Love.

The mother paused for a moment. "How many?"

Love showed her a newspaper picture of their picture of their 6-year-old son, Hardy, eating at a friend's home after the fire. "We still have him," said Love.

Mrs. Love became hysterical. Doctors said the shock will necessitate her staying in the hospital for several weeks.

The children who succumbed were Alice, 11; Edith, 9; James, 8; Duane, 4, and Paul 2.

Love said yesterday he will live with Hardy in the shed adjoining the home until local charity organizations are able to make other provisions.

Russian Forces in Danger

London, Aug. 13—The position of Russian forces around Nikolaev and Odessa is "dangerous" and the general Soviet position on the Ukrainian fronts has "greatly deteriorated in the past week," British officials conceded today. The Russians may be able to evacuate by sea, the British said.

Edison Makes Plea

Kearny, N. J., Aug. 13—Former Navy Secretary Edison, Governor of New Jersey, intervened today in the CIO strike at the Kearny shipyards of the Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Company, with a plea to his successor, Frank Knox, not to take over the yards pending efforts by the State to settle the dispute.

France Under Nazi Control

Vichy, Aug. 13—France, with her last vestiges of democracy proscribed by Marshal Petain, today buckled down to the aged Chief of State's announced policy of full collaboration with Germany while Admiral Darlan assumed complete control of France's armed forces.

Keen attention was paid to world reaction following Petain's broadcast yesterday, in which he said that France must look towards a "reconciled continent" and placed his country morally on the side of Germany in the fight against Russia.

Soviet Forces Trapped

Berlin, Aug. 13—Soviet forces hopelessly trapped in the Ukraine are facing a "Dunkirk" at the Black Sea port of Odessa, German military authorities said today.

Russian troops already are attempting to embark at Odessa for transshipment to Crimea, it was said, and the Luftwaffe is heavily pounding all harbors and coastal points. It was announced that 20,000 tons of transport ships have already been sunk at Odessa. In addition, it was said, the Luftwaffe sank a 4,000-ton transport ship and two Soviet destroyers off the Crimean coast.

The High Command's communique said:

"Fast-moving divisions are hotly pursuing the Russians in the Ukraine, who are retreating to Black Sea ports. Heavy losses are being inflicted on the Russian rear guards."

Amplifying this, military spokesmen said that Germany's "nut-cracker pressure" against Odessa was steadily increasing. The vital port has already been isolated from the East by Nazi Panzer divisions pushing to Otschakov below Nikolaev, while Crimea itself is being menaced from the northwest landspit.

WOMAN HEADS NAVY NURSING CORPS

Miss Sue Dauser Supervises Work of Nurses Aboard Ships and at Naval Bases

DIRECTS ACTIVITIES

(Note: This is the third in a series of six articles depicting the role of American women in the national defense program—INS.)

By Jane Cochran
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13—(INS)—It's not only the men who go down to the sea in ships in Uncle Sam's Navy. In the far-flung naval bases as well as in the maneuvers on the high seas you'll find women playing an important part—the trim, efficient Navy nurses.

They're in the midst of maneuvers on the U. S. S. Relief, the navy's hospital ship attached to the fleet, they serve on transports taking naval personnel to new bases, and in the navy's base hospitals.

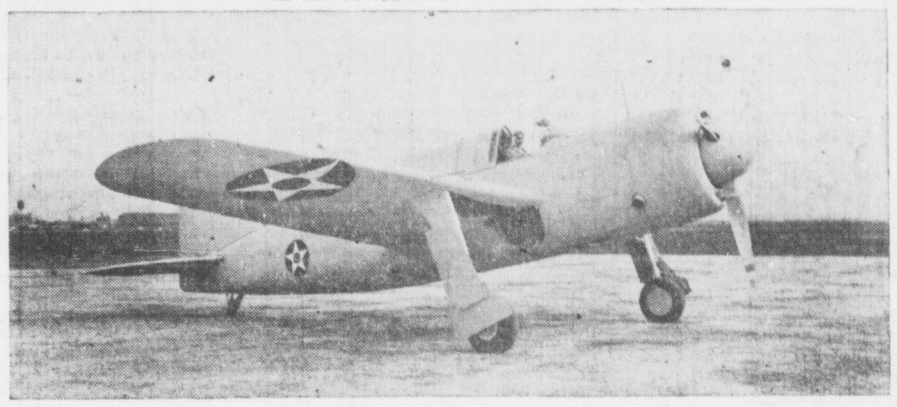

"Service on the hospital ship is the most popular with the nurses," Miss Sue Dauser, Superintendent of the Navy Nursing Corps, said.

Miss Dauser, slim, attractive woman with lustrous brown eyes, directs the activities of the nurses in Guam, Samoa, Hawaii or on ships at sea from her desk in the Navy Department.

She's been a navy nurse since 1917, when she served her first duty in the U. S. Naval Base Hospital No. 111 in Edinburgh, Scotland. She was transferred to Brest, France, before returning to America.

"The U. S. S. Relief is as fully equipped as any hospital on shore," Miss Dauser said. "It's with the fleet on all maneuvers, ready to care for any men too sick to be treated by the

The Brewster SB2A-1 long-range, high-speed dive-bomber which is now undergoing flight tests at the Newark (N. J.) Airport where it was demonstrated last week for William S. Knudsen of OPM and Rear Admiral John H. Towers of the Navy. The new warplane, which carries a 1,000-pound bomb entirely enclosed within the fuselage, is the type which will be produced at the new assembly plant being built by the Brewster Aeronautical Corporation at Johnsville, Bucks County.

BREWSTER BOMBER TESTED FOR OFFICIALS

A Preview Given of What Will Be A Daily Performance in Bucks County

PERFORMED VERY WELL

A preview of what will shortly be a daily performance in Bucks County—a flight demonstration of the U. S. Navy's latest high-speed, long-range heavy dive-bomber, the Brewster SB2-A-1—was given at Newark Airport recently for William S. Knudsen, Director-General of OPM, and Rear Admiral John H. Towers, of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics.

The new warplane which the defense officials saw being put through its paces in a spectacular exhibition, is the dive-bomber type which will be built on a mass production basis at the Brewster assembly plant now rapidly nearing completion at Johnsville, Bucks County. By fall, performances such as that viewed by Knudsen and Towers will be repeated many times a day above the Brewster airport being constructed on a 300-acre tract adjacent to the new factory.

The demonstration of the characteristics of the SB2A-1 by Woodward Burke, chief test pilot of the Brewster Company, was part of an exhaustive flight testing program to which the ship is being subjected. Many aviation notables other than OPM Director Knudsen and Admiral Towers were on hand to see the bomber take off after a short run, roar across the airport at top speed and maneuver high overhead. These included James Work, chairman; George F. Chapline, president; Zeus Soucek, vice president of sales; R. D. MacCart, vice-president in charge of engineering; and Philip Stephenson, vice president in charge of the Newark and Johnsville plants—all of the Brewster Company—Captain Wadleigh Capehart, Inspector of Naval Aircraft for the Brewster factories and Captain Kenneth Whiting, General Inspector of Naval Aircraft for the Eastern District.

Karl H. Stumpf, 28, Suffers A Fractured Pelvis in Accident at Frankford

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Taxes and The President

Washington, Aug. 12.

NOTHING could more clearly demonstrate the utter lack, in this Administration, of anything resembling a coherent economic policy than the last-minute developments in the passage by the House of the gigantic tax bill with which the Senate has just begun to wrestle. It is not surprising that, for the House leaders, resentment should be mixed with relief at having finally gotten rid of their responsibility.

—o—

CERTAINLY there was justification for resentment. Instead of getting aid, counsel and support from the White House and the Treasury, they were treated to an extraordinary exhibition of confused thinking and conflicting attitudes, culminating in the President's letter urging certain changes upon Chairman Doughton but written after the bill was reported and it was too late to do anything about it. In this letter Mr. Roosevelt not only differed with his Treasury officials and dissented from the expressed views of Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board and Mr. Leon Henderson, the Price Controller, but, as Mr. Doughton respectfully pointed out, differed from himself.

—o—

UNDER such circumstances, members of the Ways and Means Committee would hardly be human if they were not a little bitter. They have reason to be, although one of the belated Presidential recommendations, in which Mr. Morgenthau now heartily concurs, is almost too sound to dispute—to wit, that of broadening the tax base by lowering the exemptions. Had the President made this suggestion

Silver Lake Grounds Need Attention

By "The Stroller"

One of our readers writes in to complain about the condition of the grounds surrounding Silver Lake where so much money has been spent in an attempt to make an attractive place for recreation.

"It is sickening to taxpayers to see Silver Lake going to such ruin. It begins to look like it did before an attempt was made to beautify it. Uncared for pine trees are turning brown, young trees without leaves to turn brown are dying and weeds are growing five feet high.

"I am sure the people of Bristol would have looked toward such a recreational spot, though a few swim there, it seems the majority will still have to look."

CANAL SUBJECT OF ARGUMENT BETWEEN STATE AND BOROUGH

Council Directs That Matter Be Taken Up With State Department of Health

RECEIVE COMPLAINTS

Dept. of Forests and Waters Has No Funds To Maintain It

That portion of the Delaware Division of the Pennsylvania Canal extending through Bristol has long been a source of complaint. The Bristol Board of Health, at the suggestion of Borough Council, has been endeavoring to have the water course cleaned and kept in a more presentable condition. Many children swim in the canal at this season of the year and for this reason the Health Board has been anxious about its cleanliness.

Refuse is thrown into the water and then there is a heavy growth of algae which retards the flow of the water, thus permitting a scum to accumulate upon the surface.

Each year, during the summer season, complaints have been filed with the previous owners and now that the canal has been acquired by the State, the matter was taken up with the Department of Forests and Waters. After the exchange of correspondence the Department of Forests and Waters finally wrote that nothing in the way of improvement could be expected this year or next, as the Legislature had failed to appropriate money for the maintenance of the canal.

Borough Council requested that the correspondence be published and that the local Health Board proceed to take up the matter with the State Department of Health.

The correspondence reads:

August 9, 1941.

Bristol Borough Council,
Bristol, Pa.
Gentlemen:

As we have advised your honorable body from time to time, over a period of several years, we have been endeavoring to have the condition of the canal through Bristol improved. In this we have been unable to make any progress. Last year when we discussed the situation with the Department of Forest and Waters we were advised that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania had not as yet been given title to the property.

In May of this year we again wrote to the same department in an effort to get things underway before the height of the summer season when most of the complaints are received. We were then informed that the Legislature had failed to appropriate any money for the maintenance of the canal.

BRITAIN'S BUMPER CROP

Almost lost in the flood of big cable stories from Europe was a little news report that should bring real cheer to those who have worried about Britain's chances of standing up under the ruthless Nazi blockade now harrassing its vital lifelines.

It quoted Minister of Agriculture Robert Hudson as saying in the House of Commons that Great Britain in the third year of war would have as much food as in peacetime and "quite possibly more."

Apparently every Englishman, not busy in the armed forces of his country, is busy with his wife and children, tending small plots of land the way American families cultivated back-yard gardens in the last war.

As a consequence, England will keep the wolf from its door for at least another year. There will be plenty of vegetables. Undoubtedly John Bull is going to miss his roast beef, but according to Minister Hudson there is more food value in potatoes, cereals, and vegetables.

In addition to Britain's new bumper crop of back-yard gardens, many fertile acres on the great estates, once beyond the margin of cultivation, have been plowed up for raising food. That is, all except those needed as pasturage for dairy cattle.

It looks as if the British have an answer, at least for another year, to Germany's claim that she will wear England down through submarine and raider warfare along the great sea lanes of the North Atlantic.

COTTON STOCKINGS

Milady suddenly finds herself face to face with the fact that from now on she will be unable to buy silk stockings. Stocks that remained in the stores have been eagerly bought up and the factories have been ordered to cease using silk for consumer goods.

Production of nylon is inadequate to meet the demand for gossamer hosiery and the women might as well begin to condition their minds for cotton hosiery, or hosiery with tops and feet of cotton and legs of nylon or rayon. If the worst is realized, only hosiery made entirely of cotton will be available.

Winter dress style changes are being seriously considered in fashion circles. Longer dresses and coats may become the mode so that legs, less flatteringly displayed without their silken coverings, may be partially hidden.

But still worse is the possibility that American women may have to go bare-legged for a time because the production of cotton and rayon yarns now is at capacity, and hosiery of these materials cannot be made unless the government agrees to allocate them to the stocking industry.

But it won't be so frightfully frightful, my dear, if all the girls have to forego the sheen that silk imparts. In London clothing limitations have sent women to raiding their attics for old costumes with remodeling possibilities. It is claimed, in fact, that it's definitely chic, over there, to have a sort of "last year's" look.

Harry Hopkins, in England again to get a first-hand view of things, probably hopes Willkie will stay home this time.

Charity isn't the only thing that covers a multitude of sins. There's that word ideology.

while the bill was being framed, or had his Treasury officials not then exhibited hostility to the idea, it would have been in the measure before it came out of the committee. But he—and they—waited until after the bill had been agreed upon—waited until there was no chance for action without tearing it to pieces—before urging a change which Treasury representatives had opposed and to which, in the past, Mr. Roosevelt himself had been consistently inimical.

—o—

CONSIDERING these things, the feeling of House leaders of having been dealt with deceptively is natural. Natural, too, is the doubt as to how much the President really wants his own recommendations adopted. If he is wholly sincere about this broadening-of-the-base proposal, there is not the least doubt that it will be adopted. All he has to do is to let his rubber-stamp Senatorial friends, such as Senators Barkley and Pepper, know that there is a solid desire back of that futile House gesture. If he does that, it will go through the Senate with great speed and by a decisive vote. As a matter of fact, one day five years ago the Senate passed a broadening-of-the-base amendment, only to rescind it the next day under Presidential pressure. With Mr. Roosevelt now for the plan he formerly opposed, there would seem no doubt about its passage. The only doubt is about him.

EVEN in normal times there never were any save demagogic and unworthy reasons for opposing the base-broadening proposal. One big reason was that keeping the exemptions high promoted the idea that the Roosevelt Administration was determined to "soak the rich" and give the poor a free ride. That, while certainly a delusion, was a delusion which the New Dealers made pay big political dividends in every campaign from 1934 to 1940. Another big reason was the well-founded conviction that if more taxpayers were created the sentiment against the New Deal spending policies and in favor of economy in governmental expenditures would be enhanced. This was regarded as eminently undesirable by the strategists of the Roosevelt regime, and every effort to promote a fair, sound, scientific and more productive tax system was blocked on the entirely false pretense that the Administration was protecting the poor man against the greedy rich.

—o—

THE falsity consisted in the fact that hidden taxes were piled up on the poor while no effective way of plugging the loopholes through which the very rich evade taxes was—or has been—devised. All the Administration did was to increase the rates but still confine the direct-tax payers to approximately 7,000,000 individuals of the 130,000,000 population, thus exempting from direct taxes the vast bulk of the wage-earning citizens, who receive most of the national income. Now the President and Mr. Morgenthau ask that some 7,000,000 of these be brought in by lowering the exemption for single persons from $800 to $750 and for married persons from $2,000 to $1,500.

—o—

THIS, of course, is a slight reduction, but that Mr. Roosevelt should urge any at all is a significant reversal of his former attitude. Unless he "back-caps" his own recommendation (and he has been known to do that), the chances all are that the Senate will make the reduction and that the House will accept. It is, in fact, difficult to see how Congress, now that Presidential opposition no longer stands in the way, can avoid this action, as added to the other favoring reasons is the very weighty one that by lessening the purchasing power of the consumer masses, to whom most of the defense money now pouring out will flow, it would be a very greatly needed brake on inflation.

—o—

THERE is also the impelling necessity of finding revenue to take the place of the estimated $300,000,000 which would have been produced by the joint-tax return provision, knocked out in the House. Despite the Treasury recommendation, it is not likely that this will be restored in the Senate. Nor has the President's request that it be modified so as to exempt "earned income" been received with much favor. It was the Richmond Times Dispatch which first made the point that a sense of delicacy should have restrained Mr. Roosevelt from making that suggestion. If it should be adopted, no other couple in the country would profit as much as he and Mrs. Roosevelt.

BARRED SEVENS by MARYSE RUTLEDGE

SYNOPSIS

Aboard a ferry, enroute to visit his fiancee, Jane Rider, David Farland prevents an attractive young woman from jumping overboard. The hysterical girl entrusts him with an envelope, requesting that he deliver it to the socially prominent Richard Garrison, if she does not call for it within a week. Noticing a couple watching them, the girl's eyes dilate with fear. "I knew he wouldn't play fair!" she exclaims and dashes away, dropping a compact initialed "C.B." and a pamphlet entitled, "Americans, Warning!" On the train, David discovers the envelope is missing from his pocket.

CHAPTER TWO

Jane Rider wakened slowly this Saturday morning. She lay relaxed, listening to the bark of dogs up the road. In the stillness of the country, they sounded wild and free of spirit. She envied them. Suddenly she remembered, and sat bolt upright, her chestnut hair spreading over her shoulders. David was coming for the week-end. And, last night, Kurt Helm had been quite horrible.

But it was David who mattered—dear impatient David, who had said, "You're my girl," the first time he met her. Perhaps it wasn't fair to have kept him waiting for so long, because she feared her shyness, her inexperience might hamper a New York boy. Now she was decided. It would be yes to him, tonight. She wondered how she could ever get through the long day in the local library where she worked.

Her thoughts danced about David. . . . There had only been that one glorious summer in New York, after high school, when she took special courses at Columbia—and met David at the house of a friend.

She didn't want to think of Kurt Helm. She thought of him; a man ages older—he must be at least thirty-three—who had turned up four months ago, to live in the old log cabin across the road. He was a writer, he said. At first he had fascinated her. His face stood out now as she had seen it last night; narrow, blond, his thin lips cruel, his eyes green in the firelight of the living-room. That was when, after supper, her mother left them alone. Kurt's long features, his expression, his voice, had changed so shockingly.

"I shouldn't have come to this place," he said harshly. "Lean people living on fat lands, thinking of nothing while the world blows up around them. You don't know me, Jane, but you will. Do you think I'll let you marry that young megaphone who comes up here; that boy who works in a sport shop? You belong with me, in my work, I'll teach you. I'll train you. I'll love you." He caught her in his arms. "I never forget. And I get what I want. I want you. You will see—"

She was sorry now that she and her mother had ever been kind to him. Her mother was that way; warm hearted, generous, never seeing evil. She liked Helm. "Poor lad, living all by himself in that old log cabin!" she often said.

Jane moved away from her bed to the window. She wouldn't let this week-end with David be spoiled by anyone. She breathed in the damp September air. Fog drained the maples of their brilliance. The mountains, High Tor and Trap Rock, shouldered up from a purple haze.

She loved this country. Her grandfather had tended his fields and orchards here. Her father, before his death, was forced to sell the rich acres to city people. But the old brownstone house was hers and her mother's. Wherever she went with David, she would know that this was her inheritance. Kurt Helm didn't belong here, she thought passionately. He must go.

The log cabin where Kurt lived was gloomy. Hidden by oaks and underbrush, it crouched in shade, a shallow brook tinkling by the back door. In winter, it stood out among stark branches and snowdrifts. Even when no one lived in it, Jane had always disliked that eerie spot across the road.

"Breakfast's ready, dear," her mother called up.

"Coming."

Jane vigorously brushed her hair, parting its crisp waves, drawing them loosely back. The curly ends rolled outward. She slipped into the green costume David liked; short, tailored coat, silk knitted sweater and skirt. Her skin bloomed; her brown eyes sparkled. Her mouth was beautiful.

The kitchen was bright and gay, with plants on the window sills, and rows of shining pots. Mrs. Rider glanced up, smiling, her white hair soft around her pink cheeks, her figure crisp in a belted apron.

While Jane ate her breakfast, her mother hovered close. "I'll have a nice supper for David," she said cheerfully.

It was time to start for the library. Jane impulsively hugged her mother. "We do have fun, don't we, darling?"

"Of course, dear."

"Don't worry if we're late," Jane sang out from her old coupe.

The muffled ring of an axe went mute across the road. Kurt Helm, chopping wood, had heard Jane's voice.

* * * *

The 5:56 panted into the blurred lights of Haverstraw.

Jane hurried toward the platform. Her cheeks glowed in the drifting mist. Her eyes were bright under the slant of her green Robin Hood hat with the long quill.

She sighted David, leaping out of the train. Then a woman in a light coat, collided with Jane and veered off in the direction of the taxi line. Behind this woman, whose white face and terrified gray eyes seemed to stream by, David Farland raced.

"I get what I want . . . I want you. You will see," said Kurt.

He waved and shouted incoherently at Jane as he passed.

A taxicab door slammed. Jane was vaguely conscious of a stiff-shouldered man and a rather dowdy woman hurrying past her. She went back to her parked car, climbed in, her hand limp on the wheel.

David rushed back, breathless. "Missed her!" he exclaimed, as if Jane knew all about it.

Jane said, "Did you?"

Her mild sarcasm was lost on him. His blue eyes were already telling her that there was only one girl in the world for him. But he didn't waste words. He tossed his bag in the rumble seat, slammed the top down without locking it, and slid in front beside her. He drew her to him. "Love me, hon?"

His lips smothered her answer. Then he sat back, his red hair spotting the dark. "Gosh, have I had a time! I save a woman from going overboard on the ferry. She gives me a sealed envelope — mystery stuff! But it was no joke, hon. These things do happen, you know—"

"To you," Jane answered drily. She steered the car out of the station, heading for South Mountain Road.

Director, Good Housekeeping Institute

Try a salad buffet on your family when hot-weather appetites need perking up. The mere thought of a salad buffet is cooling. It's an easy meal to prepare, and offers a fine way to include that raw vegetable with health-giving vitamins. Serve indoors or out, wherever it is cooler. The family will enjoy the change from the usual routine as, plate in hand, they serve themselves.

Today's Quiet Moment

Pastor, Bristol Presbyterian Church

Accept our humble thanks, O Father, for the privilege of prayer; for the opportunity of expressing unto Thee our needs, our desires and our gratitude for Thy blessings. Teach us to use more frequently this glorious avenue of communion, that we might thereby be strengthened for the tasks of daily life, and that we might be more thoroughly aware of Thy will for us. Through Thy Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

W. C. T. U. Hears Reports Of Recent Conventions

The regular monthly meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held last night at the home of Mrs. Harry H. Headley, president, who called the meeting to order. The devotional period was led by Mrs. William DuHamel who took for her theme, "If with all your heart you truly seek Him you shall surely find Him." "Man's endeavor has been concentrated upon the material things of life, in the accumulation of money, in the aggrandizement of lands, and in the conquering of peoples for his own satisfaction of what seems to be power and strength," said Mrs. DuHamel.

"Always, as history has proven time and again this achievement has never been a thing of permanance. He dies and his money is scattered, land has a way of frequently changing hands; and inevitably, people never stay conquered—the inalienable right of manhood demands freedom—and eventually the endeavor that has required so much effort so much strength is worthless. But were man's effort spent in the seeking of God,—of the things which belong to the children of the King they would surely find Him—their Father, the source of all power and strength—giving His own, their birthright of His Power and Strength. How foolish we are not to take Him at His word, and to find the things which last forever," continued the speaker.

The minutes were then read by Mrs. Beswick, the secretary, and the treasurer's report was given by Miss Jane Rogers.

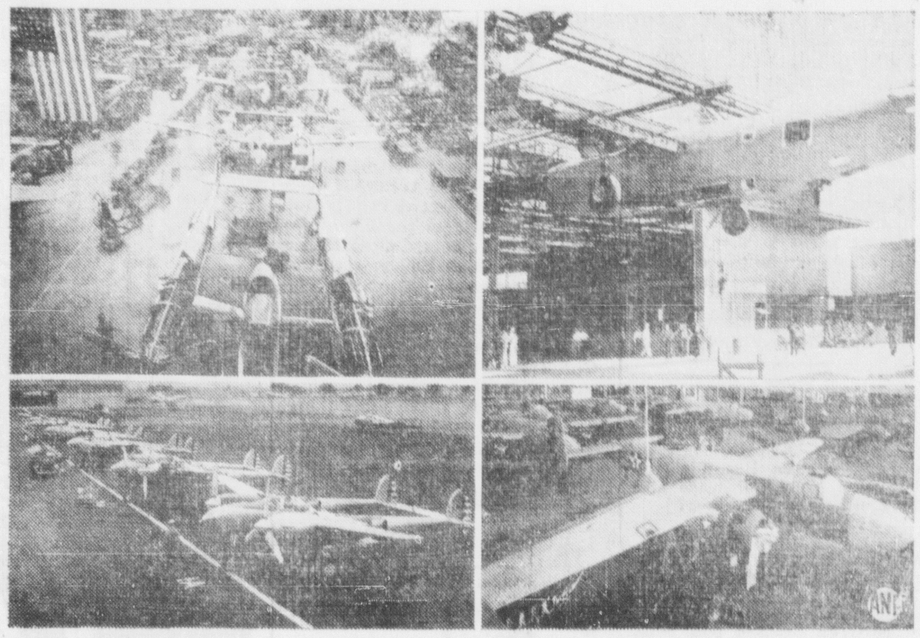

Delegates to the County Convention were appointed; they being Miss Gertrude Pope and Miss Jane Rogers, the alternates being Miss Anne Heritage and Miss Laura McCoy. Miss Jane Rogers acting for Mrs. Headley explained the cards of the Women's Home Defense Unit of the Local Council of Defense. Every girl 18 years of age or over sign the cards, marking the activities which they can do best, in case of need. Contacting the women is done through the church and Sunday Sschool and fraternal organizations.

Miss Tomlinson, who attended the Y. T. C. conference recently gave an inspiring account of the activities at Bloomsburg. This talk was followed by accounts of the Ocean Grove Conference given by four of the nine members attending. Miss Heritage gave a spirited account of the morning session at which noted speakers lectured. Miss Rogers told of the afternoon session and that whereas 52 countries of the world had organized the W. C. T. U. at the present time, 56 countries were now teaching through their Unions, the scientific results of intemperance. Mrs. Beswick and Miss Goodwin spoke of the fine pageant held in the evening.

After the benediction the meeting adjourned to meet at the home of Mrs. DuHamel, September 9th. The members enjoyed delicious refreshments provided by Mrs. Headley and Miss Pope.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

Are you having any fun? If you're not, and you want to, go and see "Million Dollar Baby." You'll have the time of your life! It the gayest and most delightful screen hit of the year, a Cinderella story with a brand new twist.

Priscilla Lane is the Cinderella girl with not one—but two—Prince Charmings, played by Jeffrey Lynn and Ronald Reagan, at the Grand Theatre.

Curtis Bernhardt, young film director who made comedy history with his first American film, "My Love Came Back," has directed "Million Dollar Baby" in a fresh, delightful style. It all begins when May Robson, as a wealthy old eccentric, learns that her father once cheated a business partner out of a million dollars. The news is brought to her in a Swiss mountain retreat, by Jeffrey Lynn, as the youngest partner in the firm of Marlin, Barlow and Fish. She goes back to America with him, determined to right the wrong her father did. They find that the defrauded man has only one living relative, a young girl who works in a department store.

BRISTOL THEATRE

"The Great American Broadcast" opens at the Bristol Theatre and the sensational trio of "Tin Pan Alley," Alice Faye, John Payne, and Jack Oakie, scores another outstanding hit. Cesar Romero, the star of "Tall, Dark and Handsome," is starred with them in the hit.

"The Great American Broadcast" is the tuneful story of radio broadcasting keyed to a gay note. Skillfully reflecting the mood of the period spanned by the picture, are the catchy numbers written especially for the film by Mack Gordon and Harry Warren.

RITZ THEATRE

The finest cast ever to grace a western film is the distinction of Republic's "Back in the Saddle," starring the famous Gene Autry and featuring his ace comedian sidekick, Smiley Burnette, which comes today to the Ritz Theatre for a run of two days.

Gene himself was recently selected for fourth place in the Quigley Publications' authoritative Ten Top Stars of 1940—an honor never before accorded a western star. Too, Smiley Burnette is listed among the top five of western favorites in many polls, though he has never had higher than co-star billing!

FOOD MARKET Advice-

FALL may be only a flip of the calendar distant, but summer is still here in the fruit and vegetable stalls, where the choicest selections of the year, ablaze with color, can be found.

Grapes, offerings of late summer, are in quantity this week. The quality of all grapes is excellent and prices attractive. Peaches are still the best fruit buy, and prices are low. Time now to preserve peaches, serve them fresh for breakfast, or make old-fashioned peach butter. Currants, gooseberries and elderberries are in, excellent for jelly-making and spicing. A few cherries are still arriving at moderate prices.

Other specially priced fruits for the week include limes, honeydews and early new varieties of apples. Budget priced vegetables include beets, green beans, celery, corn, cucumbers and squash. Peas continue to be the best buy in green vegetables. Boston lettuce is scarce, but prices remain reasonable.

Some Meat Prices Drop

Prices on lamb rib chops and pork loins are reported slightly lower this week by the largest of the food chains, but meat prices generally remain at the same levels as last week. Specials for the week-end in these chains are ribs of beef, porterhouse, sirloin and chuck steaks, boneless chuck pot roast, plate and navel beef, lamb loins and legs, and cold cuts and frankfurters.

Fowl, broilers and fryers continue to be the best poultry buys.

Boston fish markets report an abundant supply of all groundfish items for next week, with haddock, mackerel and flounders the best values. Halibut and salmon are both expected to be slightly lower, with halibut in heavy supply. New York area trap fishermen are supplying large quantities of porgies, croakers, butterfish and sea bass. Bluefish is in good supply, and excellently priced. Baltimore fishermen report that clam production is slow, and prices are skyrocketing. Shrimp production is slow, but larger quantities are expected after August 10 from Louisiana.

ROHM & HAAS NINE CAPTURES TITLE IN SECOND HALF RACE OF SUBURBAN LEAGUE; CHEMICAL MIXERS ALSO WON FIRST HALF

The 1941 season of the Bristol Suburban League officially came to a close last evening when the Rohm and Haas team defeated St. Ann's A. A., 6-2, on the Maple Beach team, thereby winning the second half race of the circuit. As the chemical workers also won the first half, no playoffs will be held.

The Rohm and Haas team finished a full game ahead of the Auto Boys and Edgely who were deadlocked for second place. Incidentally, the Maple Beach aggregation had the same number of wins and losses for both halves, 9 and 3.

Last evening it was a case of too much Gallagher for the St. Ann's team. Gallagher allowed but five hits and struck out eight batters. He appeared in trouble on several occasions but his fast ball always came to his rescue and twice he pitched himself out of trouble by whiffing batsmen. A single by Ianucci in the second accounted for the St. Ann's pair of tallies.

The St. Ann's hurler was "Mike" DeRisi and he was tapped for a total of eleven hits. The chemical workers started off by getting two runs off him in the first and did not add again until the fourth and fifth when pairs of runs were scored.

Leading the attack against DeRisi was the diminutive "Gige" Ritter who had three out of four and crossed the plate twice. Wally Oppman and Jimmy Massilla had two out of three each.

Several nice stops and catches were made in the game.

Occupants of the other car involved in the crash were treated for the following: James Polizzi, Sr., fracture of the lower jaw, loss of six teeth, and six sutures required to close the wound. Mrs. Rose Polizzi, 47, laceration and possible fracture of the left foot, contused wound of the right leg which needed 20 sutures. Four cars were damaged but the occupants escaped injury in a crash which occurred at Radcliffe and Monroe streets, last night. The cars involved were owned by Guy Crist, 1715 Wakeling street, Philadelphia; Peter Cocci, 351 Lincoln avenue, Bristol; Clifford Beaton, 914 Cedar street, Bristol; and Miss Elizabeth Delker, Bristol Township.

The Crist car was being operated in a westerly direction on Radcliffe street and the car of Cocci was traveling south on Monroe street. Cocci reported that he stopped at the "Stop" sign and then turned left onto Radcliffe street. Crist swerved his car from the right side of Radcliffe street to the left side of the road striking the Cocci car.

Two other cars parked were damaged. These were owned by Clifford Beaton and Miss Delker.

Crist was taken to the Harriman Hospital where he was treated for an injury above the left eye and upper right arm.

Canal Subject of Contention Between State and Borough

After complaint was voiced on the floor of council at your last meeting, we again took up the question with the Department of Forests and Waters and herewith attach a copy of the reply received which is self-explanatory.

Respectfully yours,
BRISTOL BOROUGH
BOARD OF HEALTH.
SERRILL D. DETLEFSON,
Secretary.

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania
Department of Forests and Waters
Harrisburg
August 8, 1941.

Mr. Serrill D. Detlefson,
Board of Health,
Bristol, Pennsylvania.
Dear Mr. Detlefson:

I have delayed answering your letter of July 30, relative to the condition of the Canal, extending through Bristol Borough, in the hope that I might find some way of at least partially alleviating the conditions about which you complain.

As you were advised before, the only purpose we had in mind in acquiring the Canal, was to preserve it in its entirety from exploitation by private interests. At the time we made the situation plain that there would be no money for improvements or for corrections of the many unsatisfactory conditions existing.

This department is without any funds which may be devoted to the correction of these conditions, and I am forced to admit that I can see no possibility of any improvement by the use of state funds, until the Legislature appropriates a proper amount of money for the correction of these conditions and the maintenance of the Canal. Naturally this means that you will have to put up with these conditions this year and next year.

It is not the kind of letter I would like to write you, but in the light of the circumstances, I feel we must face facts.

Sincerely yours,
G. ALBERT STEWART.

Woman Heads Navy Nursing Corps

hospital corps men aboard their own ship."

"Critically ill men are transferred in boats to the hospital ship, and we have regular wards, operating rooms and all modern equipment aboard the ship. There's room for 500 patients."

The hospital corps men referred to by Miss Dauser form part of the responsibility of the navy nurse. These men are trained in the base hospitals by the nurses, in the same manner that student nurses are trained in an ordinary civilian hospital. They serve in the sick bay of the battleships—as navy nurses never go aboard these ships.

Navy nurses like to travel, Miss Dauser said, and they have plenty of opportunity. The Philippine Islands, Guam, Hawaii, Cuba, Samoa, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico and Canal Zone all have naval hospital stations. Native women are trained in nursing principles by the nurses in Guam and Samoa.

Miss Dauser's job is a busy one today, as the corps is appointing more nurses as well as building up its reserve corps of Navy nurses to serve only in the event of a serious emergency.

The Navy demands the same high standards from its nurses as the Army, and nurses, to be eligible, must display executive ability, be between the ages of 22 and 28, unmarried, be a graduate nurse with one to two years' nursing experience. Marriage is cause for dismissal.

The Navy Nurse Corps was established in 1908, as part of the Medical Department of the Navy.

Uniforms, housing, food and travel expenses are paid by the government and the nurses receive $70 a month pay for the first three years of service.

"Nurses go on a six-months' probation period after enlistment," Miss Dauser said. "This training is given in the nearest large naval hospital to her home. Transfers come after her acceptance as a regular nurse."

Navy nurses have their own trim uniforms which they don after completing their probation period. And you'll find these uniforms in all parts of the world wherever the United States Navy goes.

Commenting on the flight tests, Mr. Work stated "We think we have the last word in dive-bombers and although performance figures are not yet released, we believe we have the highest performing bomber in the world." Mr. Knudsen, visibly impressed by the demonstration said, referring to the plane's huge size, "The bigger they are, the better I like them."

Capable of flying non-stop from New York to Los Angeles, the Brewster SB2A-1 is more than 100 miles per hour faster than the Stuka or American-built dive bombers now in use and has twice the range and load-carrying ability of the German type. It carries a 1000 pound bomb—half a ton of TNT—enclosed entirely within its fuselage. Other types of dive-bombers now in use carry their bombs in an external rack suspended beneath the belly of the ships. The internal storage of the 1000 pound missile in the Brewster ship gives the new warplane as trim an appearance as a fighter and increases speed by eliminating the drag which would be created if the bomb load were carried externally as has been standard practice in the past.

An all-metal, single-engined, mid-wing monoplane, the SB2A-1 has a wing span so wide that 26 men can stand shoulder to shoulder between the wing tips. It is powered with a 14-cylinder Wright Cyclone engine rated at 1700 h. p. and is equipped with a special three-bladed Curtiss Electric Propeller. Further details as to performance and fire-power of the ship are closely guarded military secrets.

Like the Brewster F2A-2 fighter, which is known as the "Buffalo" to the RAF of Great Britain, the SB2A-1 dive-bomber was developed for the U. S. Navy for operation from aircraft carriers at sea. An export version of the new plane, known as the Brewster "Bermuda," will be built in large quantities at the Johnsville plant for the Royal Air Forces of Great Britain and the Netherlands East Indies.

Both the Navy SB2A-1 and the "Bermuda" carry a crew of two, pilot and gunner. The latter is housed in a power-operated turret at the rear of the ship to protect it from attack from behind or above. Special split flaps in the trailing edge of the wing are used to slow down the bomber's terrific speed when diving almost vertically on its target. Both pilot and gunner are protected against enemy gunfire in combat by armor plated cockpits and fuel and oil tanks are of the latest bullet-proof type.

Defenders Like These Papers, Army Men Say

A SURVEY OF SOLDIERS DEFINITELY SHOWS THAT A HOMETOWN NEWSPAPER, NEXT TO A PERSONAL LETTER, MAKES A BOY IN TRAINING HAPPIER THAN ANY OTHER ONE THING. SEND YOUR SON, BROTHER OR SWEETHEART THE COURIER. WE'LL MAIL IT TO ANY CAMP FOR ONLY —

$3.00
A YEAR

Nothing makes a selective service man in camp happier than a letter from home or a home-town newspaper in the daily mail, army officials said recently after an extensive survey.

Next in order, the selective service youth likes sweets such as candy, cookies and chocolates—and chewing gum!

Officers say that on the march the gum helps keep the boys from drinking too much water and from dipping into their lunch ration.

Other offerings which bring a smile of pleasure to the enrollee include a general repertoire of utilities among which are books of stamps, flashlights, a towel now and then, toilet articles, and reading materials.

Officers say that if relatives want to be sure their addressee gets what's mailed to him, they should address the letter or package in this way: Name first, his company or battery second, his regiment third, and, lastly the name of the post office.
